

their intention to leave the company and many others are openly talking of leaving due to career uncertainty created by the Justice Department decree. Morale is extremely low and it possibly endangers the core team of MMIC design/process expertise that is being divested.

Revised Conclusion 4

The 'MMIC Business' divestiture will increase the cost of future military microwave components through increased difficulty in achieving cross functional technology breakthroughs.

Revised Conclusion 4B

The 'MMIC Business' spin-off could potentially lose critical mass of its key personnel due to morale problems associated with the Justice Department decree.

Proposed Solution

Keep the R/F Microwave Business unit intact. This will prevent an increase in MMIC costs, keep the company viable for commercial business, and allow the company to continue development of advanced technology.

Option 1: Keep the unit with Raytheon. This will provide the greatest opportunity for high performance, low cost military MMICs and modules. Since RTIS is teamed with Northrop Grumman on the F22 program they will be provided necessary MMICs for their module build as part of that agreement.

Option 2: Spin off the entire R/F Microwave unit from RTIS. This will make Northrop Grumman and other military system suppliers more competitive. The downside is a loss of possible maturity for advanced MMIC processes that would have occurred with the merger (i.e. combination of Raytheon and TI engineers sharing information.)

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

The Center for Employment Training (CET) model of employment and training programs for out-of-school youth has gained national attention as a result of its strong employment impacts relative to comparable programs. Building on this success, the Department of Labor (DOL) began funding the CET Replication Project in December 1992, providing a grant for CET-San Jose, CA to assist other programs in implementing CET-like training. In 1994 DOL competitively
